

Winter Garden

Beverly Easterling

1/29/08

Only now

when trees stand
bare-handed in the thin winter sun and red-birds
drop like falling hearts,
to hunt for seeds in the sparse gray grass,
does the old man

pause for a moment,
before picking up another stone.
Building a wall around his garden for a woman who will never see
the roses bloom.